THE FIRST SENATE AFTER THE WAR—AN HISTORICAL GALLERY OF FORTAINERS—LEADERS, BUT NOT FATHERS—JEROME, JOHNSON, WILSON, TREMBULL, AND GRANT BROWN—SUMMER AND ST. JUST—THE MERCHANTS, PIONEERS, AND JOURNALISTS OF THE SENATE.

From Our Special Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Friday, June 29, 1866.

The XXVIIth Senate of the United States has come into a place of prominence with the body of young men and more numerous than necessary to it. It has been a place of confirmation rather than of origin, and while the question of current events feeds and starves from the floor of the House, the same house is also material to the experience, independence and ability of its component. Tardous Stevens, in the Senate, would be a leader of not less eminence than he now sustains. The same result I have had occasion to make upon the better average of the legislature now prevailing in the lower branch is applicable to the upper legislature. There are no longer overlapping stations here. The floor-to-day is not like the five great gymsnasiums rising above the desert; it is a high, sheltered, like the Virginia Piedmont, where every individual knoll is a battle position and the mountains are the dim and distant Blue Ridge of a far historic era.

The man who stands in the focus of the assembly is a New-Englander, Mr. Foster. He bears the name of Lafayette, and is a direct descendant of Miles Standish. Whoever looks for excellent pedagogues in high places can find one here, remote and simple in his origin and republi- canism, a member, sitting without neck-tie, agricultural in method and quietness.

Garrison of Kentucky is the successor in volatility of Henry S. Foote, a little, wizened faced, dried-up, blind-eyed man, of enormous wind and vitality, who is better as gall, and used to stave off a vote, sometimes taking four or even five hours, as the wind blew where he was here.

Mr. Foote of Michigan is a tall, sharp-faced, frowsy-haired gentleman, of mild expression, and North western in his air for a square, fair era.

In John Sherman we have the nearest approach in the Senate to Mr. Gladstone, an inflexible, business man, extravagantly stout, whose small head is encircled with black hair, and whose small black eyes are lightning calculators. He is one of the youngest, most studious, most prudent men in the country, and adds power to the great galaxy of splendid people which Ohio has given to freedom and the country.

Howard of Michigan is a man of finished complexion, porting that of Kentuckian and Kirkwood, of Iowa is the easy, good-natured, smiling, calm, intelligent President.

Mr. Douglass once misread the Hall for a committee, but was checked in the midst of a profane anecdote, and Mr. Sedgely once professed a speech by laying his pistol on his desk, for which he narrowly escaped censure.

Here are three specimens of oak desks, set under a bright light with soft illumination glass, and studded with bright brass knobs.

Following the President's eye you observe half way of the second sound-side of a grave, gray gentleman, one of the most sedate of citizen models, inspecting through his gold glasses a wilderness of notes and manuscripts. He reminds you of a high-toned scholar, fulfilling the duties of a bank president, and there is a severe, perhaps a painful method in the movement of his lips and hands for the delivery of a speech.

He is one of the statistics of the Government well nigh upon his shoulders alone. Other men are shining ornaments, the heroes of episodes, who gain great credit or reprehension by occasional exhibitions; this man is the chairman of the foremost committee, the ultimate resort when the minority, ever pressing and importunate, turn their combative and despotic policy they would overrule.

This is for him all the dryness of eminence, little of its sparkle and leisure. He dare not be brilliant, because that would impeach his steadiness and reliability. He must carry within himself all the proofs, the statistics, the grand plan of action; and since he is not in bodily strength the peer of his contemporary Senators, we may wish him a long life.

The Senator from the Emergent and most of high command was instigated by the love of duty and the inspiration of patriotism. He speaks with more than the calmness of a legislative leader, long experience in the Courts of nisi prius has lost him the dramatic intention which gives the vulgar idea of statesmanship. A connoisseur of no surprises, the arranger of no tableau, he deals with the masonry of argument, not with affected detail, and the life of his lifetime has been a ledger, and at last the leader of the Senate.

To the right of the hall, removed some half dozen seats, you note a brown-haired man, bold and able-bodied, and younger than most others who are the foremost, in point of command and cleverness, of the few Democratic members. This is Thomas A. Hendricks of Indiana, a man of strong party, but a very poor collector, speaking yards from the center, decided in opinion, and more zealous in the general affairs of the country than the mass of his party colleagues, whose opposition is apt to be mere protest and bitterness. He is of light complexion, settled and severe of face, but without particular character either in guise or oratory. He has marred his native extempore confidence somewhat by the too frequent habit of reading his speeches from manuscript.

The State of Maryland is represented by two men of great but differing gifts. He who sits close up to the Speaker, writing all the while with an attorney's industry, is Reverdy Johnson. A massively quakery featured man with a bulging contour from the eyebrows down to the under lip cast like a prize-fighter, and seeing by the eye he has lost to forty years of hard art, the negroes and symmetries of his head show that it was framed for letters internal than exterior uses—built like a fort, but really an arsenal—while the keen, close angle of the chin gives token of some delicacy of taste and feeling. He has short, gray hair, his eye is doggedly humorous; he is the most individual physical statue on the floor.

Less significant, but more courageous than striking, is the pale meidical face of John A. J. Cresswell, a Senator beautiful in his friendships, a sturdy Republican of progressive integrity, and one of the new and more Christian regime of Maryland gentlemen. These colleagues, of opposite politics, seem to me to constitute one of the very best Senatorial delegations, and I do not know, indeed, that any other two men in the Senate could be more equal in size and bearing on the other. The men commanded would make one perfect statesman, and I am able to see that the whole coming of which the same could be said.

Cresswell comes from the northern border, so close to it in his little town of Elkin, that he has inhaled the breath of freedom across the line, and his ardent espousal of the cause of the slaves, and his life of self-sacrifice, have made him a compact, and dexterous party-man, so far he has been a failure here that the exacting and desperate Democracy, full of thirst and hunger, are loud in upholding him.

The novelist in Congress who concludes that he is to make his mark by oratory alone, will suffer assuredly from his want of skill, and those who are more than striking, are the pale meidical face of John A. J. Cresswell, a Senator beautiful in his friendships, a sturdy Republican of progressive integrity, and one of the new and more Christian regime of Maryland gentlemen. These colleagues, of opposite politics, seem to me to constitute one of the very best Senatorial delegations, and I do not know, indeed, that any other two men in the Senate could be more equal in size and bearing on the other. The men commanded would make one perfect statesman, and I am able to see that the whole coming of which the same could be said.

Early yesterday morning, Patrick McFabe, 40 years of age, residing at No. 307 West Twenty-seventh-st., was taken ill, with the usual premonitory symptoms of cholera. Dr. Ramsey was told to come from the north, and so far as I could see things, could not be made to work—labor on the part of the negroes, and not on his own account, and declined remonstrance. He was by overweening leanness that Henry S. Foote destroyed his influence in the Senate, having passed his opinions upon all sorts of things till he became too tired to be noticeable.

THE FREEDMEN'S BUREAU COURT-MARTIAL—SEVENTH DAYS PROCEEDINGS—TESTIMONY OF HENRY NUTT.

From Our Special Correspondent.

RALEIGH, N. C., Thursday, June 28, 1866.

The Bureau Court met this morning, but the prosecuting witness, Holmes, had not arrived. By consent of Court and desire of accused and witness present, the testimony of Henry Nutt for the defense was allowed. He stated he had resided at Wilmington a little over 32 years; was born and raised there; I did own some slaves; the condition of feeling among the freed people in regard to working for their former owners was, last Spring, very unsatisfactory. At that time the town of Wilmington seemed to be crowded with negroes who were idle and turbulent, and, so far as I could see things, could not be made to work—labor on the part of the negroes, and not on his own account, and declined remonstrance.

Rumors yesterday were numerous, and one two were telegraphed to the Sanitary Superintendent, but these were the only cases of cholera that occurred on June 26.

QUEENSBURY, Sunday, July 1, 1866.

Nothing new to report. Five patients, all told, are now in D. H. Bissell, Deputy Health Officer.

BROOKLYN NEWS.

THE ALLEGED MURDER IN SCHUYLERVILLE, COUNTY, PA.—Constable Jacob Chapman of Pottsville, Schuylkill Co., arrested in this city a few days since with a revolver, and charged with killing his wife, Mrs. Chapman, and his son, a negro boy, in the course of a fit of rage, and was condemned to death.
